

2. In a land where all are strangers, and our sojourning so short, in the midst of common dangers, concord is our best support; heart with heart, divides the smart, lightens grief of every sort.

4. Judge not hastily of others, but thine own salvation mind; nor be lynx-eyed to thy brother's, to thine own offences blind; God alone discerns thine own, and the hearts of all mankind.

3. Let us shun all vain contention touching words and outward things, whence, alas! so much dissension, and such bitter rancour springs; troubles cease, where Christ brings peace and sweet healing on his wings.

5. Let it be our chief endeavour, that we may the Lord obey, then shall envy cease for ever, and all hate be done away; free from strife shall be his life who serves God both night and day.
