

2. As God shall lead I'll follow still, imploring his assistance, — though far too often my self-will might wish to make resistance: let God the way for me explore, and I will now, and evermore, his counsel seek to honour.

3. If God will lead me – 'tis enough, – on him is my reliance: and let the road be smooth, or rough, I yield a glad compliance.
Into his hands I all commit, to guide for me as seemeth fit, – for living, or for dying.

4. God leads me – and my every change

though Reason may pronounce it strange –

I leave to his good pleasure:

before I was to being brought:

can I refuse his guidance!

his course reveals the measure

of good, that he for me had thought

- his terrors, lose their power; for he, my Saviour, will be the who died that faith might nothin this is my soul's sheet-anchor.
- 6. As God shall lead I'll onward go, e'en where Death's shadows lower: but Death shall prove a conquered foe, his terrors, lose their power; for he, – my Saviour, – will be there, who died that faith might nothing fear; –

5. God leads me – I will true remain,

nor faith, nor hope shall waver:

my spirit, if his strength sustain,

who from his love can sever?

With confidence I'll hold it fast,

and ills, endured from first to last,

shall work my greater blessing.

Words: Lampertus Gedicke. Translation: Henry Mills. Music: Johannes Thomas Rüegg. Copyright © 2016 Johannes Thomas Rüegg. Source: www.christmysong.com/1532/